It was a Back Down.

The illi-hearted Democracy of Kentucky showed the white feather on the tariff issue. That was plain enough to all who read their recent platform, the Louisville Courier-Journal alone excepted.

To the ridicule poured in upon the weak-kneed brethren, the Journal responded by attempting to prove that the platform is free trade to the core. The way it did it was this: The platform, among other things, endorsed the Democratic record, and the Journal held up the record, and insisted that an endorsement of the record was a full endorsement of free trade.

But the ridicule invited by this most shallow defense has brought the Journal to think better of it, and now, after many days of reflection, it clothes its quill with corrosive sadness and writes:

It is unquestionable that the failure of Kentucky to declare, in terms and specifically, for a "tariff for revenue only," has had a most exalting effect upon the enemies of the Democratic party, and likewise upon the partisans of Mr. Randall in his desperate though quiet struggle for the speakership of the next house.

Thus sorrowfully the Journal at last admits that the Kentucky Democracy, with 80,000 or more majority at her back, dare not endorse free trade. And this suggests questions: If the Kentucky Democrats, with their blooming 80,000 majority and the control of the ballot boxes, dare not do this, where dare they do it?—Detroit Post and Tribune.

THE worst thing that can be said of Ireland is that she has consented so long to live in bondage. Long before England invaded Ireland, the habits, customs, morals, religion and civilization of Ireland were better than any conferred upon her by England. The British mind is so subject to British interests, that it fails to see any justice, truth or right in that which fails to increase the wealth, gold and glory of England. Thus she has systematically robbed Ireland of independence and progress, and thus she seeks through her every agent to fasten free trade upon the United States, and thereby compel American factories to close or compete with European pauper labor in manufacturing. As the latter cannot be done in this country, the only thing left us if free trade were adopted, would be to give all our hard earnings to England, enrich her treasury, and reduce ourselves to poverty.
